LAW FOR THE COMMUNITY AND THE WORLD
To educate students in a diverse community that fosters personal growth and that enables them to attain outstanding professional skills and high ethical values with which to serve as lawyers and environmental and other professionals in an increasingly technological and interdependent global society.
A Message from President Rod Smolla

The mission of the Law School here at Vermont Law and Graduate School is captured elegantly in the School’s motto: Law for the Community and the Wild. That motto says it all—we are on a mission to advance the progress of society for reasons larger than ourselves.

Vermont Law and Graduate School has a proud legacy of top-ranked quality and leadership in matters relating to environmental and restorative justice. Never in history have these issues mattered more. We are challenged by a climate change crisis that threatens our well-being. We are challenged, within the United States and across the globe, with threats to the most fundamental values of a decent society: respect for human dignity, autonomy, and the rule of law.

Vermont Law occupies a unique place in the panoply of American law schools. There simply is no higher education institution anywhere in the nation or world that has so ardently dedicated itself to the study and advancement of progress at the intersection of environmental and social justice.

But while environmental and restorative justice are at the core of Vermont Law’s identity, our mission and reach stretch beyond those arenas. Some of you will graduate from law school and become public interest lawyers. But many of you will practice in other arenas, working for agencies, or nongovernmental organizations.

All of you will enter careers as public interest lawyers, I hope that all of you will practice in the public interest.

Whether you join us in the lovely Green Mountain State or through our online Hybrid JD program, we would be thrilled to welcome you to our special community, and our noble quest.

Rodney A. Smolla
President, Vermont Law and Graduate School
A JD Program at your pace

3-YEAR JD
The traditional law school track. Students take courses in the fall and spring, putting what they have learned to work during the summer. This is the best option for those looking for the full on-campus experience. Students can also take master’s courses in the summer and earn a joint J D/master’s in the same amount of time.

ACCELERATED 2-YEAR JD
The Summer Start AJ D program and the Fall Start AJ D program provide two accelerated options: Students who start in the summer take full course-loads for six consecutive semesters, allowing them to sit for the bar in July and start their career a year ahead of their traditional JD-track peers. Those starting in the fall complete their coursework in August of the second year and can sit for the bar the following winter. AJ D students have full access to the law school’s curriculum, clinical programs, and experiential opportunities.

ONLINE HYBRID JD
Meeting you where you’re at. Delivered through a mixture of online classes and three brief, in-person residential sessions, the Online Hybrid JD offers the same rigorous legal education as the school’s residential JD—with flexibility that allows working professionals to earn a law degree without having to relocate. This ABA-approved program is 10 semesters long and can be completed in 3.5 years.

REDUCED RESIDENCY JD
RRJ D students spend 18 months on campus before completing the remainder of their degree requirements with a combination of a Semester-in-Practice (SiP) externship and upper-level, online JD courses.

MASTER’S AND LLM PROGRAMS
- Master of Climate and Environmental Policy (MCEP)
- Master of Energy Regulation and Law (MERL)
- Master of Food and Agriculture Law and Policy (MFALP)
- Master of Arts in Restorative Justice (MARJ)
- LLM in Energy Law
- LLM in Environmental Law
- LLM in Food and Agriculture Law
- LLM in American Legal Studies
Law clinic and externship participants have the unique opportunity to help people while studying law—from women who are incarcerated in Vermont to miners in Southwestern Montana. They may help set national governance standards for farmers’ markets or work at NGOs in Washington, D.C. Questioning witnesses on the stand, conferring with state Supreme Court judges in chambers; it’s all in a day’s work and VLGS encourages students to be creative, take risks, and work on real cases—with real consequences.

An Education Put to Work

VLGS graduates are advocates, changemakers, and leaders. While on campus and after they leave it, they are doing the work that will make the world a better place.

Career Services staff help students organize an effective overall career plan, integrating passions and aspirations with coursework and experiences to lay the groundwork from day one.

Upon graduation, students spread out across the country, putting their education to work in criminal justice, at government agencies and nongovernmental organizations. From the courtroom to the field, they take with them the Vermont Law and Graduate School spirit and activism.

ALUMNI IN SERVICE
Across the country and around the globe, VLGS alumni make a difference wherever they are. Of the nearly 8,000 VLGS alumni, more than 800 work in government, about a quarter of whom are on the federal tier, with sizable contingents at the Environmental Protection Agency (44 alumni), the Department of Justice (16), and in the military (25). More than 200 work in the federal government; state governments have 106 alumni in their ranks, and local governments have 456.

Tamara Toles O’Laughlin JD/MELP’09, President and CEO, Environmental Grantmakers Association
Founded in 1978, the ENVIRONMENTAL LAW CENTER at Vermont Law and Graduate School houses the largest environmental law program in the country, consistently ranked among the nation’s best by U.S. News & World Report. The multidisciplinary program positions graduates to take lead roles from land use to the intersectionality of climate change.

— JENNIFER RUSHLOW, Dean, Vermont School for the Environment; Faculty Director, Environmental Law Center; Professor of Law
With the current criminal justice system ethically and financially untenable, we need a new way to think about and respond to harm, conflict, and crime. By bringing together students committed to developing new ways of thinking with national and international restorative justice leaders, VLGS educates justice reformers.

Students specializing in restorative justice will combine traditional law courses with restorative justice courses, simulations, and experiential learning opportunities.

Graduates are ready to act as forceful, articulate agents for change in law and restorative justice. As criminal justice evolves, using more restorative practices, all lawyers should understand that there are many ways to view conflict and conflict avoidance.

Restorative justice courses may include:

- Restorative Justice Theory and Practice
- Origins, Evolution, and Critical Issues in Restorative Justice
- Adversity, Trauma, and Victimization
- Criminal Law
- New Approaches to Domestic and Sexual Violence
- Restorative Justice in Educational Institutions
- Ethics and Restorative Justice
- Restorative Justice in Indigenous Communities
- Clemency, Pardon, and Expungement
- Global Restorative Justice
- Juvenile Justice
- Peacemaking Courts
- Race, Crimes, and Restorative Justice
- Police Use of Force
- New Approaches to Domestic and Sexual Violence
- Restorative Justice in Educational Institutions
- Ethics and Restorative Justice
- Restorative Justice in Indigenous Communities
- Clemency, Pardon, and Expungement
- Global Restorative Justice
- Juvenile Justice
- Peacemaking Courts
- Race, Crimes, and Restorative Justice
- Police Use of Force

When you are invested in the people you live and work with, you treat them differently and value their opinions and wisdom. If we want to make changes in society, and fix mechanisms that we know are broken—especially in our delivery of justice—we need to value all people and offer those who have been harmed or marginalized by our current system, true support and opportunity. We work to create positive change for everyone’s tomorrow.

—STEPHANIE CLARK, Director, Center for Justice Reform

Our Campus

Nestled next to the White River in South Royalton, our 13-acre campus facilities prioritize sustainable practices. From composting toilets to minimize water usage, super windows to maximize insulation, enthalpic energy wheels to control humidity and recycle exhaust heat, and lighting solutions that use natural and energy efficient lighting for interior and exterior spaces—we practice what we teach.

Our Community

We are scientists, hackers, hikers, and musicians; talented, quirky, restless, engaged, entrepreneurial self-starters who believe in community and the power of the law to do good. We are socially conscious risk-takers with big ideas; we are idealists interested in practical training; we are friends and activists—true catalysts for change.

VLGS is known nationally as an environmental and social justice revolutionary. We are committed to equity and inclusion. As an institution of higher education, we recognize that the law has too often neglected Black, Brown and Indigenous people, and members of the LGBTQIA+ community, that it has been used to legitimize the inhumane treatment of marginalized groups within these communities.

We commit to fight against inherent ignorance, intolerance, and racial and social injustice through teaching and scholarship, research and practice, open discussion, and public events. We believe in providing a learning environment that is inclusive of all people, regardless of race, sex, sexual orientation, gender identity and expression, religion, nationality, ethnicity, ability, age, or socioeconomic class.

Vermont Law and Graduate School encourages—and empowers—students to dream big. It welcomes and shares passions for social justice, the environment, food equity, criminal justice reform, the fair treatment of animals, and so much more.

At VLGS, realism and idealism collide through data and humanity. The school community is the facilitator, driving change and, through innovative academic programs, sets the stage to bring together students and faculty who will positively transform the world around them.
IDEALISTS. REALISTS. CATALYSTS FOR CHANGE.
