- Taught at Clarkson University
 - Enrollment: 40
 - Topics Covered: Normative ethical theories, stakeholder analysis, ethics & company culture, ethics & product safety, and ethics & international business.
 - Designed to introduce MBA students to the decision-making models necessary for making ethical decisions in business. Focused on the interrelationship between strategic, legal, and ethical factors in decision making. Case studies used to assist students in developing an ethical framework for their career.
- SB 693: Seminar in International Business - The Culinary Industry of Italy 2017 - 2018
- Taught at Clarkson University
 - Average Enrollment: 14 per year
 - Topics Covered: The Slow Food movement, the supply chain of food, and agritourism.

- This course had three distinct sections: an in-class review of the topics noted above, a two-week trip to Italy with students visiting businesses related to these topics, and a final independent research project requiring students to synthesize the topics learned in class, observations made during the trip, and academic research on these topics.

UNIV 190: The Clarkson Seminar

2014

- Taught at Clarkson University
- Average Enrollment: 50
- Topics Covered: Academic writing, academic research, social contract theory.
- As part of Clarkson's Freshman Seminar program, this course was designed for students to learn about the conventions required in higher education for writing and research. All writing was iterative in nature. Students were required to write multiple drafts reviewed by the professor, and to meet with the professor one-on-one to work on writing skills. The class content focused on modern apocalyptic narratives and how they related to a variety of social contract theories.
